

Doha Conference Focuses on New Facilities for Discovering Oil

DirectRooms.com announces the members of the Society of Petroleum Engineers will be holding a conference in Doha that will discuss new findings and the latest technology being used for seeking out reserves of oil and gas

January 18, 2011 (FPRC) -- The SPE Project and Facilities Challenges Conference at METS will join society members and other experts from the industry in a bid to share ideas and knowledge on the best ways to recover the fossil fuels. The event will focus primarily on technology such as smart design and the most efficient methods of implementation and how this can be applied to facilities.

Speakers at the event will consist of some of the main oil companies from within the region such as Qatar Shell and Qatar Petroleum. Ideas will be presented on enhanced measures for recovering oil along with universities and other members who will cover topics such as management of oil fields and drilling waste management.

The conference will also run alongside METS 2011, the Middle East Turbomachinery Symposium, which is the first time the event has been held within the region. Turbomachinery refers to rotating equipment used for extraction and the Middle East is the core region of the world to feature the machinery. Issues covered at the event will include the operation and correct installation measures along with servicing methods.

Society members using Doha hotels will be meeting at the Sheraton Resort and Convention Hotel where the conference is being held from 13th to 16th February 2011.

Lek Boonlert, marketing head at DirectRooms.com commented: 'As many members are in Doha over the event hotels rooms will be getting booked up so advanced reservations are recommended for attendees.'
