

Experts Review New Data Analysis Methods in the Maldives Between 10 and 11 April 2011

DirectRooms.com reveals that company experts and academics in the area of data research and review will be sitting down at a major conference in the Maldives to share knowledge on the subject in April.

March 10, 2011 (FPRC) -- Between 10th and 11th April 2011, WKDD 2011, the fourth International Conference on Knowledge Discovery and Data Mining, is involved with computer science and how this is applied to analysing large volumes of information.

Data mining specifically looks at statistical methods used to highlight patterns and similarities from a field of data. Knowledge discovery stems from this with the findings from analysing the data called the knowledge or what has been gained by looking at the information.

The analysis of data has many different functions and is often used for targeted marketing campaigns and can also be used for issues such as surveillance. As part of this the event is set to address topics such as how the fields can be applied in forecasting terrorism and the possibilities for counter measures.

A number of guest speakers from research centres, universities and organisations worldwide will be presenting findings from each of their respective fields and providing audiences with an insight into new technology and current methods being deployed. With the number of speakers and delegates expected to attend demand for Maldives Resorts is set to rise as people fly in for the event.

Lek Boonlert, marketing head at DirectRooms.com commented: 'Attendees travel from all over the world to be at the conference and each member will be searching for accommodation. Hotels rooms are going to be limited at certain places so visitors will need to book early.'
