

Sarah Gallienne Investigations Announces Special Offer On New GPS Trackers

The private detective agency, which is based near Cardiff, Wales, has announced it will be running a special discount on its latest GPS trackers in the New Year.

December 30, 2012 (FPRC) -- Sarah Gallienne Investigations has now purchased a new range of GPS trackers for client hire to cater for the increasing number of people who are requesting vehicle tracker installations in order to monitor their partner's alleged infidelity. The company has announced that it will be offering a 25% reduction in the weekly hire price of each tracker to clients throughout January, February and March 2013.

These new, sleekly designed GPS trackers are typically smaller than previous models, though they differ in size, with the smallest being likened to a standard box of matches. The battery life of each unit will vary from seven to ten days to six months depending on its specifications. They all offer the same service and are designed to log a vehicle's location at set intervals via GPS. Depending on the needs of the client, a report can then be produced that details the route the vehicle took. This document will log the time, location and longitude, latitude and speed of the vehicle, as well as the remaining battery strength.

GPS trackers are now being used for a variety of reasons. Sarah Gallienne, who founded her business back in 2008, explains why she's seen demand for these devices grow so substantially in recent years.

"Put simply, GPS trackers are a discreet and largely undetectable way of monitoring someone's activity," she says. "Their applications are practically endless. For example, many companies are keen to check on mobile employees by logging their journeys; parents are often eager to keep a close eye on children who have just started driving; anxious partners, too, will often fit a tracker to their spouse's car if they suspect they are not being faithful. In addition, many insurance companies are now offering lower premiums to customers if a tracker is fitted to their vehicle."

Those interested in hiring GSP trackers from Sarah Gallienne Investigations are encouraged to visit the company's website for up to date information.
