San Francisco, CA, January 19, 2015 (FPRC) -- Starting one's own website can be a challenge, and many people fall at the first hurdle, choosing the right web hosting provider. This is because there are so many providers out there all claiming to be the best that individuals end up with choice paralysis, and can't even begin their online journey. Inexpensive Web Hosting is a website that provides independent and insightful consumer advice to help people overcome this problem, and they recently published a new countdown of the Best Cheap Web Hosting for 2015 based on the providers' performances throughout last year.

The countdown includes the ten best rated cheap web hosting providers from 2014 with vital statistics about their performance, including an overall rating out of ten, their prices, refund policy, disk space, bandwidth and domain name registration or migration fees, together with a link to the full review.

The site (<https://inexpensivewebhosting.reviews>) has created the countdown by reviewing each one of the providers in extreme detail, including their current number one provider, iPage (<https://inexpensivewebhosting.reviews/ipage-review/>). A link to these full reviews is included in the rankings so that individuals can find out more before committing to a provider.

A spokesperson for Inexpensive Web Hosting Reviews explained, "We have built our 2015 top ten on the results of rigorous analysis of things like transfer, upload and download speeds, uptime, customer support and more as well as the factors we include up front on the countdown itself, so individuals can be assured of the reliability of these choices above and beyond their unique selling points and particular incentives. iPage is still number one right now, but 2015 is only in its first month, and we look forward to seeing whether they can retain that spot until this time next year."
