

Minecraft Maps Ninja Publishes Reviews Of New User Generated Minecraft Adventure Maps

Minecraft Maps Ninja has published multiple new reviews of user generated Minecraft adventure maps that offer unique experiences for players of the popular low-fi computer game.

San Francisco, CA, February 10, 2015 (FPRC) -- Minecraft has been a phenomenal success for its developers, who chose to create a low-fi, 16-bit sandbox world in which the open ended combination of elements would help people discover new materials and mine or build to their hearts content. This 'digital Lego' approach has seen millions of gamers champion the game, creating their own games within the Minecraft world. MinecraftMaps.Ninja is a website dedicated to reviewing user generated content, and has just published new posts on a suite of the latest, best and most unusual Minecraft adventure maps available.

The newest editorial concerns the Saving The Cosmos adventure map, offering more of a preview than a review with exclusive screenshots and information. Players fight through 10 universes in this Mario Galaxy style adventure through the many landscapes, puzzles and boss battles.

The Dead World: Zombie Adventure guide includes an infographic walk through of how to survive one of the deadliest and most exciting adventure maps in Minecraft, which seeks to replicate the Walking Dead experience of being caught by a zombie horde.

Minecraft Maps Ninja has also made known their best Minecraft adventure maps from last year, with Ender Scrolls, Exodus and Zelda all topping the rankings.

A spokesperson for Minecraft Maps Ninja explained, "Minecraft has truly become one of the most burgeoning centers for online creativity in the world. Unlike much of the gaming community this creativity is still used in a fundamentally positive, constructive and communal way, designed to share fun times and live out fantasies between gamers. The latest Minecraft maps have been great examples of this, and the best of last years' maps are a brilliant place for new visitors to start, meaning there's plenty of content on our site for those new to or experienced in Minecraft."

About Minecraft Maps Ninja: Minecraft Maps Ninja is a website dedicated to providing quality selected Minecraft adventure maps including news, reviews, download links and walk throughs.
