Newcastle Kill A Pest have been in operation for over 30 years and they employ experienced and knowledgeable technicians. These technicians know pests inside out and their life cycles of living, hiding and breeding. They know the best products to eliminate customers pest problems and prevent them coming back.

The company have recently launched a new termite inspection service. The site explains that if a customer suspects that they have a termite problem at their home or business and if they want to prevent possible termite infestation, then they should make an appointment for a professional termite inspection.

The site states that once termites invade a building, they can cause damage that is very expensive to fix and also compromise the integrity of the building. When the evidence of a termite is visible the damage they have created is very probably extensive. This is why prevention and early detection through inspections are paramount.

A Newcastle Kill A Pest termite inspection is very thorough and has many steps a customer can expect to see. A termite inspection report is made in accordance with AS 3660.2-200, a visual inspection of the interior and exterior of a property is carried out and they will look for evidence of wood damage.

They also identify areas inside and outside of a property that could potentially attract termite infestations, these include standing water, wood mulch close to structures and moisture around foundations. They will also inspect soil around building entry points, landscaping timbers, retaining timbers, gardens, trees and fences.
