Mr. Quentino is considered an authoritative Graphitii review expert, due to his comprehensive experience with conversion rate optimization and user engagement methods. Mr. Quentino suggests that Graphitii users take advantage of Snapchat's latest marketing features.

Snapchat is known for its very targeted audience of people that like to share very unique digitally altered pictures through their app. They became famous for this, and for the simple reason that the application does not store any of the pictures. This focus on taking pictures has led them to coming up with a QR code way of marketing. It involves snapping a picture, of course, and by using what they call Snapcodes, they will make it possible to open a link to a person's website.

Essentially, if one can snap a picture of the Snapcodes, the application will do the rest. It's also easy to do. This is a setting within the application itself that allows users to create them in just seconds. The process has only a few steps. Once a person has clicked Create Snapcode, they will then paste the website URL and add an image that will also be seen in the QR code that will be displayed. This is going to be saved into their camera role, and they can put this on photos, such as ones that are embedded on their website, or even posted on Facebook. Once they see the snap code, and they take a picture of it, it will ask them if they would like to go to that URL. It will also provide tracking features and analytics, making this a very unique way to market products and services online.

Time will tell in regard to its overall popularity and whether or not this will lead to sales. It is definitely a novel idea, as with anything that Snapchat tends to do. It will likely produce many initial advertisers that will try it out in order to see what happens. It may be a very popular way of advertising that can help many businesses and individuals make money.
