Rick Pinsonneault founded his driving school in 1976 and has been serving the southwestern Vermont area ever since. They offer driving lessons and education to teenagers and adults, and their aim is to produce drivers who are courteous, cautious and defensive in their driving.

April is National Distracted Driving Month and this new report focuses on the dangers of being distracted by texting. The report states that texting while driving has become one of the greatest dangers on the roads in recent years. This is closely followed by pedestrians who are also Distracted while texting and not looking where they are going when crossing the road.

The report continues by saying that the advances in smartphone technology are replacing some frequent home computer functions, such as emailing, social networking and banking for instance. This means that people are using their cellphones more than ever, even when driving.

Texting while driving is responsible for more than 1.6 million car crashes every year. It is also the cause of over 325,000 injuries and upwards of seven teen deaths a year. The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration explain that driving and texting is six times more dangerous than driving when intoxicated.

Pinsonneault Driving School's instructors are highly trained and are certified and licensed through the State of Vermont Department of Motor Vehicles. They are also fully insured with liability limits of $1,000,000. The school takes pride in their service and say that they receive positive feedback from their students, both young and old.
