Laser hair removal is a dermatological procedure that has grown in popularity over recent years, as technological advances have made it both safer and less painful. The rapid growth of laser equipment has made it considerably less expensive, too, meaning that it can now be afforded by a variety of clients.

A Fort Collins laser hair removal dermatologist launched a wide range of updated hair removal services.

All procedures are undertaken using professional, modern equipment, and the process is supervised by a group of certified professional dermatologists.

Laser hair removal involves individual hair follicle laser targeting and removal. A strong laser beam is directed at the hair follicle, thus inhibiting growth. With repeated procedures and multiple sessions, laser hair removal can lead to prolonged hairless periods.

The dermatological procedure is most effective for people with dark hair and fair skin. However, the Fort Collins laser hair removal clinic also provides services to people with darker skin and lighter hair, using modern, adaptable laser hair removal equipment.

The clinic provides laser hair removal services for hair on all parts of the body, except eyelids and the surrounding area. To minimize the unwanted side effects, the Fort Collins dermatologist uses a variety of certified dermatological procedures aimed at reducing blistering, redness and all other potential issues.

All services are based on individual consultations and intervention plans, with professional dermatologists analyzing the hair and skin complexion of the client and determining the most appropriate procedure. Services are performed in complete accordance with all medical and technological standards, in an effort to provide competitive laser hair removal services for Fort Collins clients.
