Highlights

Global Biologics value market is projected to grow about 9% compounded annually from 2010 through 2022. North America is projected to occupy about 50% of the total global market. Blood and blood products are the major product area with tremendous potential and growth. Automated blood collection and processing systems as well as prior-screening capabilities of latest assays are expected to enhance quantity and quality of blood. Since the last decade, the therapeutic market for monoclonal antibodies has grown exponentially. Bevacizumab, trastuzumab, adalimumab, infliximab and rituximab are the top five therapeutic antibodies available. About 40% of the best selling biopharmaceuticals are therapeutic monoclonal antibodies.

Development of vaccines has proved be crucial and effective in the pharmaceutical industry. Growing human and animal populations and advancement of science and technology are the driving factors behind the global vaccines market. High prevalence of diabetes, treatment and diagnosis rates, device penetration and changes in price are driving the human insulin market. AS per WHO, about 171 million people around the world were diagnosed with diabetes in 2000, and the number is expected double by 2030.
