Companies shouldn't have to pay out money until they have a better understanding of what their website will look like, OverflowLocal.com announces

Appleton, WI - April 14, 2017 /MarketersMedia/ -- Companies often demand a client pay a fee before beginning the Website Design process. When businesses choose to work with Overflow Local, however, this is never the case. This web design and ecommerce web development provider allows clients to get a taste of their new website before any money changes hand. The company confidently offers this service, as they know they are able to deliver an extraordinary website design that aligns with the client's vision, goals and brand image.

"Payment isn't rendered until the client sees a fully functional front page that allows them to experience the new website. This page is live and in living color, allowing the client to see what we can do before committing to a financial decision. We recognize that a website is a reflection of the overall business and can draw a consumer in or have them looking elsewhere. For this reason, we create a cutting edge website that the client and his or her customers are sure to love," Mark Barber, spokesperson for Overflow Local, announces.

A website must be engaging if consumers are to return to it again and again. The goal is to begin with strong website development, then follow this up with the experience the client wants their target visitor to have upon arriving at the site. When this process is used, the client witnesses a higher conversion rate thanks to the combination of design and digital marketing finesse.

"The process begins with an analysis of the business to determine how it differs from the competition to ensure the site projects this to the visitor. The team of designers then brainstorms before creating the new site, one that will meet or exceed the expectations of the target audience. The process of developing the site begins, and the customer approves the first page before any payment is due. Once this step has been finalized, the little extras are added in before the client approves the site and it goes live," Barber explains.

Overflow Local recognizes the client is the main focus and ensures communication lines stay open at all times. This communication is focused on results, as the company recognizes their client is busy and doesn't have time to read lengthy project reports. Employees are trusted to handle their individual tasks, and the finished project is a result of this collaboration, one that exceeds the sum of its parts. Finally, every website is done right the first time, as the client deserves nothing less.
