The report covers the market landscape and its growth prospects over the coming years. April 19, 2017 /MarketersMedia/ -- Drying is the oldest method of food processing, which locks in the flavor and nutrients of the foods so that these foods can be enjoyed all year around. Through drying, the moisture from the food can be removed so that microorganisms such as bacteria, yeasts, and molds will not be able to grow and the spoilage of food can be prevented. Thereby, the shelf life of food can be increased.

Publisher's analysts forecast the global dried processed food market to grow at a CAGR of 6.43% during the period 2016-2020.
