The Amazon product launch service "Viral Launch" recently launched a coupon code system that would allow new and existing users access to all their services with a $50 off discount. This move has been explored in more detail in a UBC News video news report, which displays a live coupon and references an instructional video Viral Launch users can follow, to apply the code correctly and secure their discount.

The Video News Report explains how Viral Launch is gaining rapid popularity among Amazon sellers who are looking for a quick and hassle-free method to get exposure to their new and existing products.

The platform is known as a 'product launch service' due to the nature of rapid increases in sales velocity (such as those created by a Viral Launch campaign) having a positive impact on a product's rankings in the organic Amazon search results.

The coupon system Viral Launch has recently implemented, now offers customers (new and existing) the ability to use the platform at a reduced rate, which actively increases the ROI of each campaign.

Viral Launch has already been established as a key part of modern Amazon product launch formulas and strategies, whereas in recent years it was known in smaller circles, masterminds and shared between successful sellers. The new promotional strategy examined in the UBC News Report allows for $50 off one-time launches, and $50 per month off subscriptions.

UBC News is a new and rising news channel focusing primarily on local and online business, as well as interesting news events relating to Amazon and eCommerce.

Viral Launch's pricing has risen in recent months, appearing cost prohibitive to some sellers. The coupon code system has, in turn, encouraged many sellers to give the platform a try and even gone as far to convert long-term subscribers with the ongoing discounted access.
